Hi Peter,

Apologies the product/derivative sections in our database are somewhat confusing. These have been being populated for the better part of two decades, in which changes in methodologies throughout the years has caused some inconsistencies. GS Series is only covering the HP Aero GS40/50 products as you have noted.

Note: we are working on a new compliance database in Windchill to correct issues like this.

A better way to search in our current database is to use the advanced search function. You can use this function to find certain types of certifications and use the description field to find specific product names, as shown below:

We have also started adding in the certificate numbers in our remarks field. However this was not always done for legacy products. Also with searching this way it can be difficult due to some variability in the certificate name i.e. because spaces.
